Vision: Economic Justice for All

Mission: Transforming Economic Systems for People to Achieve Economic Justice

1. WHO WE ARE

Economic Justice Forum (EJF) is a Kenyan non-governmental organisation advancing Economic Justice for All by transforming economic systems so that people can enjoy their rights, participate meaningfully in decisions that affect their lives, access economic opportunities and benefit equitably from public and natural resources.

EJF was established from the understanding that many persistent human rights and development challenges are fundamentally connected to the way economic systems function.

Poverty, inequality, unemployment, weak public services, environmental degradation, exclusion from decision-making, unequal access to productive resources and the unequal distribution of the benefits and costs of development cannot be addressed sustainably without examining the economic, governance and institutional systems that produce them.

EJF therefore works at the intersection of economic justice, human rights, public policy, governance, natural wealth, climate and water justice, public finance, research, digital transformation and inclusive economic development.

Our work seeks to understand and influence the systems through which resources are generated, governed, allocated and utilised, while strengthening the ability of people and communities to participate in decisions affecting their rights, resources, livelihoods and future.

EJF brings together communities, public institutions, policymakers, civil society organisations, businesses, academia, technical experts and development partners to generate evidence, strengthen institutions, support meaningful participation and develop practical solutions that contribute to equitable and sustainable prosperity.

The organisation is rooted in Taita Taveta County and the Kenyan Coast, while building partnerships and knowledge networks across Kenya, Africa and internationally.

2. OUR VISION

Economic Justice for All

EJF envisions a just society in which economic systems work for people; public and natural resources are governed transparently and equitably; institutions are accountable; communities can meaningfully participate in decisions affecting their lives and resources; and every person has a fair opportunity to live with dignity and achieve sustainable prosperity.

3. OUR MISSION

Transforming Economic Systems for People to Achieve Economic Justice

EJF's mission is to address the structural and institutional conditions that produce economic exclusion and inequality.

We seek to strengthen the systems through which public resources, natural wealth and economic opportunities are governed and distributed, while expanding people's capacity to participate in public and economic decision-making and access meaningful opportunities.

4. OUR UNDERSTANDING OF ECONOMIC JUSTICE

EJF considers human dignity the foundation of Economic Justice.

Economic rights are fundamental human rights. People's ability to access livelihoods, water, public services, productive resources, information, participation and fair economic opportunities directly influences their ability to enjoy their broader human rights.

Economic justice therefore goes beyond economic growth.

It asks:

- Who participates?
- Who makes decisions?
- Who benefits?
- Who is excluded?
- Who bears the costs?
- Are institutions accountable?
- Are resources governed in the public interest?
- Are people's rights protected and respected?

EJF seeks to advance economic systems that are:

Equitable — distributing opportunities, resources and benefits fairly;

Participatory — enabling people to influence decisions affecting their lives;

Accountable — ensuring institutions and resource managers can be questioned and held responsible;

Inclusive — removing structural barriers faced by women, youth and other excluded communities;

Sustainable — protecting the natural and economic foundations of present and future generations; and

Rights-based — placing human dignity, equality and fundamental rights at the centre of economic decision-making.

5. OUR APPROACH AND STRATEGY

EJF connects evidence, community participation, advocacy, legal action, policy engagement, institutional strengthening and practical implementation.

Our approach recognises that systemic problems require more than a single intervention. Depending on the issue, EJF may combine research, public engagement, policy advocacy, technical support, strategic partnerships and legal mechanisms to achieve meaningful and sustainable change.

❖ Research and Evidence

EJF undertakes applied research, policy analysis, documentation, data generation and knowledge development to understand economic, environmental, governance and human-rights challenges.

Evidence provides the foundation for our advocacy, policy engagement, litigation and programme design.

❖ Community Engagement and Empowerment

EJF works with communities to strengthen understanding of rights, resources, governance processes and economic opportunities and to enable people to participate meaningfully in decisions affecting their lives.

We seek to ensure that communities are not merely beneficiaries of interventions, but informed participants in defining problems, developing solutions and demanding accountability.

❖ Public Interest Advocacy

EJF undertakes public-interest advocacy on issues affecting economic and social rights, public resources, natural wealth, water, climate justice, governance and equitable development.

Advocacy may involve public campaigns, stakeholder engagement, policy dialogue, submissions, public statements, institutional correspondence and engagement with decision-makers.

❖ Public Interest Litigation and Legal Action

Public Interest Litigation (PIL) forms part of EJF's strategy for advancing accountability and protecting rights.

Where appropriate, EJF may support, initiate or participate in strategic legal action concerning matters of significant public interest, particularly where violations of economic and social rights, environmental rights, water rights, constitutional obligations, public accountability or community interests require judicial intervention.

EJF views litigation not simply as a means of resolving an individual dispute, but as a potential mechanism for:

- Securing effective remedies for rights violations;
- Enforcing constitutional and statutory obligations;
- Holding public institutions accountable;
- Protecting public and community interests;
- Clarifying and strengthening legal protections;
- Challenging unlawful or inequitable decisions; and
- Contributing to broader institutional and systemic reform.

Where litigation is appropriate, EJF seeks to complement legal action with evidence, community engagement, public-interest advocacy and policy reform so that legal outcomes can contribute to lasting institutional change.

❖ Policy and Legislative Engagement

EJF engages policymakers, public institutions and legislative processes with evidence and practical recommendations aimed at improving laws, policies, resource governance and institutional arrangements.

❖ Technical and Institutional Support

EJF provides technical assistance in areas including governance, public finance, natural wealth governance, programme design, monitoring, digital systems and economic opportunity.

❖ Innovation and Technology

EJF applies digital tools, geospatial systems, artificial intelligence, data and other appropriate technologies to strengthen evidence, access to information, monitoring and decision-making.

❖ Strategic Partnerships

EJF works with government, civil society, communities, academia, businesses and international organisations to combine expertise, resources and institutional reach.

❖ From Evidence to Systemic Change

EJF's overall strategy is to connect:

Evidence → Community Voice → Advocacy & Legal Action → Policy & Institutional Reform → Implementation → Monitoring & Learning

This enables EJF to address immediate concerns while also pursuing the deeper institutional and systemic changes necessary for economic justice.

6. PROGRAMME AREAS

EJF implements five interconnected programme areas. Each addresses a distinct dimension of economic justice while contributing to the organisation's overall mission.

6.1 NATURAL WEALTH, CLIMATE & WATER JUSTICE

Natural resources, water and the environment are fundamental to human wellbeing and economic life. Communities whose livelihoods depend on land, water, forests, biodiversity, rangelands, oceans and other natural assets are particularly affected when these resources are poorly governed or unequally accessed.

EJF works to ensure that natural wealth contributes to equitable and sustainable prosperity while protecting the rights and livelihoods of communities that depend on it.

The programme brings together Natural Wealth Governance, water rights, climate justice, biodiversity and landscape regeneration, and nature-based economic development.

It addresses:

- Community land and natural wealth governance;
- Water rights and equitable access to water resources;
- Climate resilience and climate justice;
- Biodiversity conservation and landscape regeneration;
- Blue Economy opportunities;
- Sustainable community livelihoods;
- Nature and climate finance;
- Community benefit-sharing; and
- Environmental accountability and evidence.

EJF approaches water not merely as an infrastructure or service-delivery issue, but as a matter with direct implications for human dignity, public accountability, livelihoods, health, equality and economic justice.

✓ TsavoLifeBank™

TsavoLifeBank™ is an EJF flagship initiative in the Greater Tsavo Ecosystem. It seeks to demonstrate how community land, biodiversity, landscape restoration, livelihoods, governance and nature finance can be connected within an integrated economic justice model.

✓ Bura Ranch

EJF works with Bura Ranch in Taita Taveta County on community-led landscape regeneration, biodiversity, natural wealth governance and sustainable economic development.

Bura Ranch has 1,400 members, providing a significant community platform for demonstrating approaches to community natural wealth governance and inclusive economic development.

EJF's work is supported by environmental monitoring and evidence systems including NatureGrid and the Open Forest Protocol.

6.2 PUBLIC FINANCE, ECONOMIC GOVERNANCE & ACCOUNTABILITY

Public resources are among the most important instruments through which governments fulfil economic and social rights.

The way revenues are raised, budgets are prepared, resources are allocated and expenditure is implemented directly affects people's access to water, healthcare, education, infrastructure, livelihoods and other essential services.

EJF therefore approaches public finance as an economic justice, governance and human-rights issue.

The programme brings together public finance, fiscal justice, devolution, resource allocation and social accountability.

It focuses on:

- Public budget and expenditure accountability;
- Equitable resource allocation;
- Fiscal justice and intergovernmental finance;
- County public finance and devolution;
- Public debt and its economic and social implications;
- Public participation in budgeting and development planning;
- Revenue and resource governance; and
- Citizen and youth engagement in economic decision-making.

EJF's objective is not simply to improve knowledge of budgets, but to strengthen the ability of citizens and institutions to understand how public resources affect rights and development outcomes and to participate meaningfully in decisions concerning those resources.

✓ IMPACT360 – Budget Power Lab™

Through IMPACT360 – Budget Power Lab™, EJF has partnered with ActionAid Kenya to strengthen youth participation in public finance.

The initiative provides young people with practical knowledge and tools to understand county budgets, engage public participation processes and interact more effectively with decision-makers and local development structures.

6.3 DEMOCRACY, HUMAN RIGHTS, PUBLIC POLICY & INSTITUTIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Economic justice depends on institutions that are capable, responsive and accountable.

This programme brings together democratic governance, human rights, public policy, legislative engagement and institutional strengthening around the common objective of improving the relationship between citizens and institutions.

EJF works to strengthen:

- Democratic participation and civic engagement;
- Public policy and legislative processes;

- Devolution and intergovernmental governance;
- Institutional accountability and effectiveness;
- Social accountability;
- Community-government engagement;
- Economic and social rights;
- Access to information and meaningful participation; and
- Evidence-based policy and institutional reform.

The programme recognises that rights cannot be fully realised where institutions are inaccessible, unresponsive or unaccountable.

EJF therefore works on both sides of the relationship: strengthening institutions to perform their responsibilities while strengthening citizens and communities to understand, exercise and advocate for their rights.

6.4 RESEARCH, DIGITAL INNOVATION & KNOWLEDGE SYSTEMS

EJF considers knowledge, evidence and technology important tools for advancing economic justice.

The programme integrates applied research, digital transformation, data and knowledge systems, geospatial intelligence, artificial intelligence, innovation and Monitoring, Evaluation, Accountability and Learning (MEAL).

The purpose is to make information more useful for communities, institutions and decision-makers and to strengthen evidence-based policy and implementation.

EJF develops and applies:

- Applied and policy research;
- Data and knowledge systems;
- Digital justice approaches;
- Environmental and geospatial information;
- Artificial intelligence and emerging technologies;
- Innovation and incubation;
- Digital monitoring and evidence systems; and
- MEAL systems.

✓ Green Digital Justice Hub™

The Green Digital Justice Hub™ is an EJF innovation platform bringing together digital technology, environmental intelligence, skills, innovation and economic justice.

It provides a foundation for technology-enabled research, digital skills, environmental information, innovation and access to economic opportunities.

✓ Natural Wealth Index

The Natural Wealth Index provides a framework for understanding the relationship between natural assets, communities, economic value and governance.

✓ NatureGrid & Open Forest Protocol

EJF works with NatureGrid and the Open Forest Protocol to strengthen monitoring, evidence and documentation of biodiversity, landscape restoration and natural wealth interventions.

6.5 ECONOMIC EMPOWERMENT, SKILLS & LABOUR MOBILITY

Economic justice requires people to have meaningful opportunities to participate productively in the economy.

EJF works to expand access to skills, employment, entrepreneurship, enterprise development and labour-market opportunities, with particular attention to young people, women and communities facing structural barriers to economic participation.

The programme integrates skills and employability with actual economic opportunities rather than treating training as an end in itself.

It focuses on:

- Youth employability and workforce readiness;
- Skills development;
- Women's economic empowerment;
- Entrepreneurship and enterprise development;
- Green and Blue Economy opportunities;
- Digital economy opportunities;
- Climate-smart livelihoods;
- Market access; and
- Labour mobility.

✓ Kenya County Labour Mobility Accelerator

EJF is working with the State Department for Labour and Skills Development as a Technical and Implementation Partner in the Kenya County Labour Mobility Accelerator (CLMA) pilot.

The initial pilot focuses on Taita Taveta and Mombasa counties, connecting youth profiling and workforce readiness with labour-market opportunities.

✓ COASTAL RESILIENT ENERGY FUTURES™

COASTAL RESILIENT ENERGY FUTURES™ links the just energy transition with economic opportunity through clean cooking, green skills, women and youth enterprise, circular economy opportunities and locally driven economic development.

✓ Youth Employability & Labour Mobility

EJF is developing pathways connecting skills, workforce readiness and employment opportunities within Kenya, across Africa and, where appropriate, international labour markets.

7. CROSS-CUTTING HUMAN RIGHTS PRIORITIES

EJF applies a rights-based economic justice lens across all its programmes.

Particular attention is given to:

- Economic and social rights;
- Water rights and access to essential services;
- Environmental and climate rights;
- Participation and accountability;
- Equality and inclusion;
- Access to information;
- Livelihoods and decent economic opportunity;
- Community rights and natural wealth governance;
- Youth participation; and
- Women's economic and civic participation.

EJF recognises that these issues are interconnected. Access to water, for example, is simultaneously a human-rights, governance, public-finance, environmental and economic issue.

8. GOVERNANCE

EJF is governed through institutional structures designed to provide strategic direction, oversight, accountability and professional management.

✓ General Assembly

The General Assembly provides the broader governance framework of the organisation in accordance with EJF's governing instruments and applicable Kenyan legal and regulatory requirements.

✓ Board of Directors

The Board provides strategic oversight, governance and institutional accountability.

13. STRATEGIC PARTNERSHIPS & COLLABORATION

EJF believes that complex economic, environmental and human-rights challenges require collaboration across institutions and sectors.

The organisation therefore builds partnerships that combine community knowledge, public-sector capacity, technical expertise, research, innovation and access to economic opportunities.

- Women in Mining Africa (WiM-Africa) — Freetown, Sierra Leone.

EJF continues to develop partnerships with institutions whose mandates and expertise contribute to economic justice, human rights, climate justice, governance, innovation and inclusive development.

14. IMPLEMENTATION MODEL

EJF's implementation model connects research with participation, policy with practice, legal action with advocacy and local experience with institutional reform.

Where appropriate, programmes follow a practical cycle:

Evidence → Engagement → Advocacy & Legal Action → Policy & Institutional Action → Implementation → Monitoring & Learning

EJF seeks to ensure that interventions generate practical evidence and lessons that can improve future programming, influence policy and support institutional change.

The organisation also uses pilot initiatives to test practical approaches before broader replication or scaling.

This enables EJF to connect community-level realities with county, national, regional and international policy discussions.

15. GEOGRAPHIC OUTLOOK

EJF is rooted in Taita Taveta County and the Kenyan Coast, with programme interests extending to other parts of Kenya and through partnerships to wider Africa and international networks.

Its geographic focus provides a practical context for addressing interconnected challenges involving:

- Natural wealth and climate justice;
- Water rights;
- Public finance and devolution;
- Governance and accountability;
- Youth employment and labour mobility;
- Women's economic empowerment; and
- Inclusive and sustainable economic development.

EJF's partnerships in Kenya, Ethiopia and internationally create opportunities for knowledge exchange, technical collaboration and wider policy engagement.

The organisation's long-term outlook is to develop, demonstrate and scale approaches that contribute to economic justice across Kenya, Africa and relevant international policy spaces.

16. ECONOMIC JUSTICE AS A HUMAN RIGHTS ISSUE

EJF's work is fundamentally connected to human rights because economic systems determine many of the conditions under which people are able to exercise their rights.

A community cannot fully enjoy its rights where it has no meaningful voice in decisions concerning resources on which its livelihoods depend.

A person cannot fully realise economic opportunity where access to skills, employment, markets and information is systematically restricted.

A citizen cannot meaningfully participate in democratic governance without access to information and genuine opportunities to influence public decisions.

A community cannot achieve sustainable development where climate change and environmental degradation undermine the natural assets on which its economy depends.

Likewise, access to safe and reliable water is not simply a development concern. It is connected to human dignity, health, equality, livelihoods, public accountability and the ability of people to live and participate fully in society.

Public resources also have a direct human-rights dimension. When public finances are poorly governed or resources are allocated inequitably, the consequences are often experienced through inadequate services, lost opportunities and deeper inequality.

Where rights are violated or public obligations are not fulfilled, legal accountability and public interest litigation can provide an important avenue for securing remedies and advancing systemic change.

For EJF, these are therefore not separate issues.

Economic justice is a critical dimension of human dignity, equality, participation, accountability and the realisation of human rights.

17. OUR INSTITUTIONAL COMMITMENT

EJF is committed to building a credible, accountable, evidence-driven and professionally governed institution capable of working across communities, government, civil society, academia, business and international development systems.

We believe lasting change requires more than responding to individual symptoms. It requires understanding and transforming the systems that shape economic opportunity, resource distribution, institutional performance and people's ability to participate in decisions affecting their lives.

Through its programmes, partnerships, research, technical work, advocacy and legal engagement, EJF seeks to contribute to a society in which:

People have a meaningful voice in economic decisions;

Public institutions are accountable and responsive;

Natural wealth and water resources are governed equitably;

Public resources serve the public interest;

Economic opportunities are accessible and inclusive;

Communities can participate in decisions affecting their resources and livelihoods;

Rights violations can be challenged and meaningful remedies pursued; and

Human dignity remains at the centre of development.
